I've been using plastic fabric film and film coverings on my models for many years. Here, downunder, many of the products you mention are no longer available, I am under the impression that the British Solarfilm outfit is no longer producing. In my experience, FWIW, Monocote was one of the early products. I found it rather difficult to use and ...

For our solar films, you can request the installer to prove to you the ultraviolet and infrared rejection readings after the installation on your car. I do not know about other companies but we give the values of the film itself so the reading will be higher when installed on your car because the glass is also adding to the value we gave for the film.

The Solar Film est un film r#233;alis#233; par Saul Bass et Elaine Bass avec Robert Millar. Synopsis : Un court-m#233;trage sur l'#233;nergie solaire.

Seems like now even if AD says give 3M crystalline, also might get lousy film already Anyway, nobody mentioned Huper Optik here. Heard that Nissan cars now will give HO films, and I'm trying to find out how good is their specs, but it's not very easy.

With Total Solar Rejection (TSER) at 55%, it will be very difficult to find another better film (3M Crystalline CR70 only provides TSER of 50%). You can also check if V-Kool have higher reflective solar film that could increase the heat reflection, but the visible light will also be less. I'm not sure about the price though. But for comparison ...

My replacement solution for Microlite/Solite film has been to find and buy cream and white Microlite/Solite film whenever I can find it. Most people just store a lot of hobby stuff and never use it. It turns up from time to time when people decide they'll never use it, and I buy it immediately. Kinda like kit collectors, where a large
