What is a battery holder?

A battery holder is a compartment or cavity designed to keep cells fixed in place safely and securely while conveying power from the batteries to a device. It is most commonly sold as an integral or removable part, either inserted into or attached onto a suitable item of cell-powered equipment.

Which type of battery holder do I need?

For 9V PP3 cells, the strap and lead battery holder type is most commonly used. It allows the cell to be lifted clear away from the main body of the item for removal, replacement or reattachment.

What is a contact battery holder?

A contact battery holder is a type of battery holder that uses simple tension-type terminal contact plates and accessories, such as coil springs, buttons, top spring arms, and leaf spring contacts, to hold a battery in place and allow it to deliver power to the device drawing from it.

What is a clip battery holder?

A clip battery holder is a type of battery holder that consists of two metal arms, arranged in a loop with a small gap at the apex, through which the cells are pushed and held in place. They are most often associated with common cylindrical batteries such as AA and AAA, but are also sold for securing C, D, and 9V PP3 cells.

What is a PCB battery holder?

A PCB battery holder is a type of battery holder designed for mounting printed circuit board (PCB) batteries. They can be made from metal or plastic and are often used to accommodate single coin cells, such as those found on a typical computer motherboard. However, they can also be configured to allow for multiple cells and other battery types, including cylindrical AAA, AA, C, or D cells.

What is a panel mount battery holder?

A panel mount battery holder is a type of battery holder that is designed to be slotted into a pre-existing cavity in the side, top, or back exterior panel of a device and can be removed entirely as a single self-contained unit when it's time to swap out the batteries.
